Professionalism and Civility: All participants, including delegates, advisors, and organizers, are expected to conduct themselves in a professional and civil manner throughout the conference. This includes treating others with respect, refraining from using offensive or derogatory language, and avoiding any behavior that may disrupt the proceedings of the conference. Delegates should communicate with each other and with chairs in a respectful manner. Delegates should be open to different perspectives and cultural backgrounds.

Plagiarism and Misrepresentation: Delegates are expected to uphold the highest standards of academic integrity and to refrain from engaging in any form of plagiarism or misrepresentation. This includes properly citing all sources and accurately representing the positions of the countries or organizations they are representing. Delegates should engage in thorough research and analysis of their country's stance on issues and should be able to defend their arguments with evidence and logical reasoning.

Participation and Engagement: Delegates are expected to actively participate in the conference, engage in constructive debate, and work towards finding solutions for the issues being discussed. Advisors are expected to provide guidance and support to their delegates while also allowing them to develop their own ideas and strategies. Delegates should attend all sessions of the conference, be punctual and engaged in discussions, and contribute to the drafting of resolutions.

Dress Code: Delegates are expected to dress appropriately for the conference, which typically means wearing formal business attire. This includes dress pants or skirts, blouses or dress shirts, and dress shoes. Delegates should present themselves in a professional manner and should avoid clothing that may be considered offensive or inappropriate.

Timeliness and Preparedness: Delegates are expected to arrive on time for all sessions of the conference and to come prepared with all necessary materials, including research and position papers. Delegates should respect the time of others by being punctual and should ensure that they have all necessary materials in order to participate in discussions and debates.

Technology Usage: Delegates are expected to use technology, such as laptops and phones, in a responsible and professional manner. This includes refraining from using devices during sessions unless necessary, avoiding distracting others with device usage, and respecting the intellectual property rights of others. Delegates should use technology in a way that enhances their participation in the conference, rather than detracting from it.

Compliance with Rules and Regulations: All participants are expected to comply with the rules and regulations of the conference, including those related to behavior, conduct, and use of facilities. Failure to comply with these rules may result in disciplinary action, including removal from the conference. Delegates should familiarize themselves with the rules and regulations of the conference.
